EMV debit cards are precisely the same as check cards, except that they have computer chips embedded within them. People can typically purchase prepaid cards or gift cards at grocery stores or convenience stores using cash or check. Credit cards give consumers access to a line of credit from a bank, with the amount depending on the specific credit card and the credit history of the consumer. Types of Debit Cards Photo Courtesy: Astrakan Images/Getty Images There are a variety of debit cards that you may come across. However, when you get a credit card, you can make more significant purchases that you can pay off over time (though you should be aware of your bank's interest fees and late payment fees). That card is associated with the bank where you have your checking account. This type of payment card deducts money directly from the balance of that account whenever it is used. Also called "check cards" or "bank cards," individuals can use these cards to make purchases online or in person. From there, you will be able to not only withdraw funds but also transfer and deposit money, as well as view your account balance. For those who use debit cards for in-person purchases, all you have to do is run the black magnetic stripe on the back of the card through the card machine or insert your card into a special slot for built-in security chips.
